Working for the whole community

Sarah has been married to Neil Stock for eight years and they have three children aged four, six and seven.

Together they run a market leading business manufacturing bespoke accessories and garments for the fashion and couture industry.

As a married mother of three children and working in her own business, Sarah's priorities are the same as many of the people of Colchester. Concerns about health, education and law & order.

Sarah has lived her entire life in the Colchester area; she currently resides just two miles outside the constituency boundary - the furthest from the town she has ever lived! Sarah went to school in Colchester, attended college and evening classes in Colchester and started work in Colchester. She bought her first house in Colchester, got married in Colchester and her children were born in Colchester. Colchester is part of Sarah Candy, and Sarah Candy is part of Colchester.

Sarah has been active in politics since joining Colchester Conservatives in 1997. She is a member of the Cabinet on Essex County Council and is responsible for a budget of over £400 million. Her political work outside the council chamber has seen her leading a major campaign to protect our open space, working with our communities to achieve practical solutions to everyday problems and perhaps her greatest skill - listening to people!

Sarah believes she has the necessary qualities to represent the town and people of Colchester: determination, commitment and stamina coupled with strong personal convictions and the ability to get on with people from all walks of life.

Sarah is committed to the view that a Parliamentary candidate must be honest and demonstrate integrity in everything they do. She understands the dedication and leadership that will be demanded of her - not just by the Conservative Party but even more importantly by the people of Colchester.

A real choice for Colchester
